Firstly, well done for producing a thorough and professional document.

My comments are below:

The area surrounding the main village of Horam is rural and definitely has a charm that is a pleasure to live in. If we wish to attract people to live here and to contribute to the community then we should aim to preserve the environment and character as much as is possible in and around the development of the area. By this I mean, more specifically, preserve trees, nature, fields, views and dark skies.

The winding Waldron Ghyll is right to be highlighted as proving 'visual interest and a sense of place' and is but one example of the charm of the Horam surrounds. This is an area we need to walk among countryside, enjoy the views, exercise and loose ourselves in nature. Many studies here and abroad have testified to the wellbeing of humans by such activity and in such surroundings.

One point to mention that I did not see in the document was that it may be beneficial in the overall strategy of housing provision to try to build more small bungalow dwellings for the retired population in the arae. In particular for social housing, this may enable some of the retired population living in the already established social housing to move into smaller community based developments and thus free up the larger older properties to younger families. I am not sure whether this suggestion suits the age / wealth distribution of Horam, though this may be worth lookimg into.
