YOUR COMMENTS ON THE CASE

this site at Downlands Farm with it's diverse range of flora and fauna also contains the territory of Britain's premier butterfly THE PURPLE EMPEROR, the purple highflyer, the emperor of the woods, names the Victorians knew it by, this was the prize butterfly for collectors of days gone by and get the heart racing, and at the end of the day they would enter slumber with memories of hot summer days in pursuit of this magnificent insect with it's shimmering purple flashes as it flew around the tree tops, we as purple emperor watchers still get the same thrill as those Victorians but now we are armed with cameras and not nets, this butterfly seems to be spreading east from it's stronghold in Surrey and West Sussex .I've been watching this site since 2018, the territory is occupied in the afternoons with at least two males fighting and chasing over the oaks. the females lay their eggs on the sallow bushes. wouldn't it be sad to lose this special place now and for the future.
